Buy one now of: Zircon i65 If you want a wider functionality and more ease of use than the simple Hanson CH model provides, this is a finder should be right up your alley. It has a small LCD screen that shows you exactly where the studsAAAs center is and offers audio cues to help you quickly locate additional studs. Then there is the surprisingly handy wire warning feature, which detects the presence of live wires up to two inches into the wall, which is especially useful for contractors, but also nice for homeowners who would rather not ruin their own wiring when doing a little DIY work. The downside is that these extra features increase the price. Buy one now from: ProSensor 710 Franklin This model offers remarkable stud-finding ability and can work equally well for ambitious DIYers or professionals. It has a broad horizontal sensor setup that allows you to get a good look at the wall, with a row of LED lights that mark exactly where objects begin and end for more detailed work (up to 1.5 inches deep). However, the 710 is a one-trick pony: It can detect studs and similar objects, but you won'eAAAt get any other information out of it eAAA thereeAAAs no LCD screen and no live wire detection. But what it does, it does extremely well. Buy one now from: Stanley FatMax Stud Sensor 300 This Stanley model is a step closer to the professional-grade, ideal if you are undertaking a big project, move around a lot, or just really want to hang a bunch of things on your walls. It includes a backlit LCD screen for low-light conditions and auto-calibration that makes setup a whole lot easier. There are also a couple of secondary detection features that can sense live wires, as well as any metal present up to three inches in the wall, which is useful for a lot more than just finding studs. Buy one now from: Black and Decker BDL190S Black and Decker created this sturdy, top-tier stud finder with durability and dependability in mind for all projects, big or small. Professional construction companies routinely use them for large-scale building, and homeowners can benefit just as much from them for their do-it-yourself Includes automatic technology and projects small horizontal lines so you can make your marks with trust. The LCD screen is particularly full of information, showing nails, nails and living wires. An accession of wall fixation allows you to be locking it to more involved projects. Note that you will need some AA batteries to run this Weighty Stud Finder. Buy one now from: Vivreal 4-in-1 Stud Finder and Wall Scanner If you have been exasperated with past nail locators in the past and prefer one that can tell you more, this model can be a good option. It has an LCD and four different digitization modes: Pan Sweep, Deep Scanning, Metal Scan and CA Scan. You may identify exactly what the walls, the material, shape and the proportion. You can detect things like living wires, metal and nails. In addition, automatic calibration facilitates the use of this device and the prison is also very reasonable. Buy one now from: Studpop Magnetic Studfinder if you are not ambitious, and you are looking for a friendly, accessible and confineable guarantee to use at home, then Studpop is o Product for you. You put the model similar to the boot on the wall. He appears when he feels a hell. You put a screw on site and you're done. It works in ordinary materials like Sheetrock, Plaster, Late and Tile, and it doesn't require batteries. If you are hanging on the shelves or setting up simple objects around the house, you may want a casual clove locator who can keep in a kitchen drawer and remove when needed.
